Invest in your Organization... Hire a CRSP®

Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) Expertise

Increasing health and safety hazards in the workplace, mounting employer obligations and the financial impact associated with occupational incidents means that your organization cannot afford anything less than a Canadian Registered Safety Professional \(CRSP\)®.

A CRSP® Adds Value to Your Organization

A CRSP® offers in-depth knowledge of OHS principles and practices and applies this knowledge to develop systems in order to achieve optimum control over hazards in your workplace. A CRSP® will represent OHS matters at all levels and will interact with other business leaders in the interest of your organization's performance.

A CRSP® Provides the Following Return on Your Investment:

- Offers management proactive health and safety solutions
- Drives injury reduction and loss prevention through OHS management
- Actively engages with stakeholders across all levels of your organization in building a positive OHS culture
- Leads your organization's processes for monitoring, measuring and evaluating OHS performance
- Exemplifies professional credibility because of the high standard required to obtain and maintain certification

Canadian Registered Safety Professional (CRSP)[®]

Why Hire a CRSP[®]?

The CRSP[®] designation is the mark of an OHS professional and a nationally recognized level of achievement within the OHS field.

As an employer of safety professionals, you can be confident that a Canadian Registered Safety Professional (CRSP)[®] has demonstrated their integrity, knowledge and commitment to safety principles, risk management, and leadership.

A Canadian Registered Safety Professional (CRSP)[®] Demonstrates Leadership Through:

Proven Expertise. A CRSP[®] must meet the qualification requirements including having completed formal education, demonstrated professional practice experience and demonstrated competency through the successful completion of an examination covering a broad scope of OHS subject matter.

A Commitment to Continual Learning. In order to maintain certification, a CRSP[®] is challenged to continually update their knowledge and skills through a robust recertification program. This ensures you always have a qualified, up-to-date OHS professional managing your health and safety interests.

Compliance with a Code of Conduct. A CRSP[®] commits themselves to a high standard of ethical behavior in agreeing to and signing the Rules of Professional Conduct (Code of Ethics). The Code covers a range of important professional issues including confidentiality, conflict of interest, professional growth and more.

The Board of Canadian Registered Safety Professionals (BCRSP) sets certification standards for occupational health and safety professionals. BCRSP is the only ISO 17024 accredited organization for occupational health and safety in Canada. The CRSP[®] designation is a widely accepted form of recognition by industry and government. The BCRSP has also received the ISO 9001 certificate of registration for their Quality Management System.

A Strategic Choice

"...our business demands high standards in everything we do with safety being integral in the delivery of our services and results. Our prevention programs require strong safety professionals supporting our business leaders to set and maintain high safety expectations across the organization. The CRSP designation is our credential of choice when placing candidates in key environmental, health and safety roles. It's good for business!..."

A. Harrington, P.Eng., MBA, Vice President, Enbridge Inc.

"The CRSP designation establishes credibility in the development and presentation of a corporation's health and safety programs. Individuals holding the designation have the skills to take such programs to the "best in class" level, where the results generally speak for themselves, which in turn, creates buy-in. There is no doubt in my mind of the value a CRSP brings to our organization.

At Thunder Bay Hydro our current and previous lead health and safety professionals have held the CRSP designation and over the past 15 years the health and safety programs developed at the utility have resulted in our best ever results. Not just lost time, but overall improvements in all measures, significantly reducing costs in terms of real and untold dollars. Just as important, if not more so, the success has created a culture of awareness and doing things right and staying healthy. I'm confident in stating that our success would not be as great without the expertise a CRSP brings to the table."

A. Covello, CHRP, SHRP

Vice President, Human Resources & Safety, Thunder Bay Hydro
